OPEC Ministers Agree on Plan To Share Production Cutback

Oil ministers from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Coun-tries, after a second day of talks, said they expected to end their meeting Wednesday. Some of the ministers were seeking permission from their governments to accept the lower production quotas.

Traders and analysts were awaiting evidence that OPEC would muster enough discipline to fulfill the plan to reduce output. If strictly observed, the curback could squeeze the market.

An adjustment of the price differentials, however, would involve delicate negotiations. Most OPEC delegates favored deferring the question, perhaps until the group's next meeting, scheduled for Dec. 19 in Geneva. One Gulf minister said a solution could be found before then,

The danger of the delay is that it will leave many official OPEC prices badly out of line with those prevailing on the spot market, which accounts for 30 percent to 40

Sudan Gives Saudi Financier Broad Rights to Exploit Resources

Adnan Khashoggi

By Colin Legum

LONDON - President Gaafar Nimeiri of Sudan has signed an agreement that would give the Saudi financier Adnan Khashoggi rights to a half-interest in the exploitation of the country's oil resources, including the rights of Western companies if these were forfeited.

The agreement creates a new company in which Mr. Kheshoggi is in effect a partner of the Sudanese government. The company has been granted unusual concessions and will have a monopoly over natural resources in Sudan that are not already in private hands. A copy of the contract was made available to this reporter by a source close to President

The deal reflects the difficult economic situation in Sudan, but it is also a clear warning to the Western companies that their interests will be in jeopardy if they do not fulfill their contractual obligations to produce oil,

Chinese-Soviet Talks on Ties Stall

BEIJING (AP) — China and the Soviet Union have made no progress on the three major obstacles between them during a fifth round of normalization talks in Beijing, a senior Chinese official said Tuesday. The official, who asked not to be identified, said the two sides had agreed to continue the talks, held at six-month intervals, in Moscow next year. "There's been no progress on the major differences," the official

Sano.

China has defined the three major obstacles as the presence of 600,000 Soviet troops deployed on the Chinese-Soviet and Chinese-Mongolian borders, Moscow's backing for the Vietnamese in Cambodia, and Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Moscow has said it cannot negotiate understandings that might be detrimental to "third countries," meaning Vietnam, Afghanistan and Mongolia.

Bolivian President Ends Protest Fast LA PAZ (UPI) - President Hernán Siles Zuazo has called off a protest

Police and Rioters Clash in Manila

MANILA (UPI) - Riot police fired rifles into the air and tear gas at 800 marchers Tuesday who were demanding a "peoples' court" to try the nation's armed forces chief for the slaying last year of the opposition leader Benigno S. Aquino Jr.

Office workers watching from bank buildings threw bottles, flower pots, rocks, ash trays and lightbulbs at the 300 police. Officials said 11 policemen and the fire chief were injured. The marchers were led by Agapito Aquino, Benigno Aquino's brother.

One demonstrator clubbed on the head was hospitalized. At least 14 persons were arrested, many of them dragged away by their hair. It was the first display of violence against critics of President Ferdinand E. Marcos since a civilian commission implicated the military last week in Mr. Aquino's slaying. Most of the commissioners said the anned forces chief, General Fabian C. Ver, was "indictable" in the slaying.

Honduras Says Cuba Trained Rebels

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (UPI) - The Honduran military says that Cuba and Nicaragua are training Honduran leftists in guerrilla tactics in an effort to build a large-scale rebel movement.

The military showed 19 alleged rebels at a Monday news conference

LISBON (Reuters) — Portuguese police said Tuesday that a crude double bazooka was found near the new U.S. Embassy in Lisbon on Saturday in what appeared to have been an abortive bombing attempt. Police said a tip by a Portuguese Communist Party official had led to the discovery and disaming of two iron tubes, tied together, each containing a bazooka grenade. The device had been wired for electrical detonation but the mechanism was faulty, police said.

The embassy is in a western suburb of Lisbon, near the Communist headquarters. Police reported that their informant said he had been told by two children that they had seen the device, fixed to a crude wooden ramp between the two buildings.

Israel Vows Action on Bus Attackers

TEL AVIV (NYT) - Minister of Police Haim Bar Lev assured the Knesset, the Israeli parliament, in Jerusalem Wednesday that the security services were giving high priority to the eradication of the Avengers, the new Jewish extremist group which accepted responsibility for Sunday's rocket attack on an Arab bus in Jerusalem.

The minister said the group will be dealt with as effectively as another of Jewish anti-Arab terrorists had been earlier this ve five of its members were arrested in May and are on trial for various terrorist-acts or already convicted.

Reagan Camp Foresees Sweep Of 50 States, Gain in Congress

By Steven R. Weisman New York Times Service

PARKERSBURG, West Virginia - President Ronald Reagan drew noisy, emotional responses from both supporters and protesters as he opened the final week of a re-election drive that aides said would concentrate on the traditional Democratic strougholds of the Northeast and Middle West.

Mr. Reagan's advisers asserted that his lead in the opinion polls made it possible for him to try for a sweep of all 50 states and for heavy Republican gains in the Congress. The visit Monday to this economically ailing and heavily Democratic state, which has only six electoral votes, was described as part of the

His plans call for him to spend the last full day of campaigning next Monday in his home state. California. The absence of a visit to Texas reflects the campaign's view that that state is secure.

James H. Lake, the Reagan campaign spokesman, said that by his calculation Walter F. Mondale could not win unless he carried Ohio. Illinois, Michigan and Mis-

Mr. Reagan was greeted with roars of approval from 3.500 stu-dents at Millersville State College in the farmlands of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. A handful of protesters sought to disrupt the proceedings, but their schoolmates shouted them down or muffled them, in some cases by putting a hand over their mouth.

At one point, several Reagan supporters seized a protester and carried him out of the gymnasium as the crowd cheered.

"Did somebody just leave back there?" Mr. Reagan asked with a smile, prompting still more cheers. Later in West Virginia, thousands of supporters packed a high school gymnasium and stood on the lawn outside listening and cheering Mr. Reagan. There were a few negative signs along his route. but the crowd was overwhelmingly friendly. While hammering at Mr. Mondale on national security and economic issues, Mr. Reagan appealed repeatedly for Republican candidates for the Senate and House of Representatives. Seeking to share his own popularity with others on the ticket, he said he would rather have a "sympathetic Congress" than a big victory margin for him-

Mr. Reagan's pleas were yet another reflection of the growing confidence of his campaign aides.

Despite the confidence embodied in the strategy, Mr. Reagan re-peatedly warned Monday against complacency. "I've been trying very hard not to read the polls, and don't you read

Mondale Defies Polls, Is Confident Of Upset in Campaign's Final Week

By Bernard Weinraub New York Times Service

SPOKANE, Washington -Walter F. Mondale reaches the end defeat because there's a conviction of his quest for the presidency, the that something is happening that candidate's mood and campaign are tenaciously upbeat in the face of polls that show a huge lead for President Ronald Reagan.

Mr. Mondale and his closest aides voice confidence that, in the week ahead, the Democratic presidential candidate will spark the biggest political upset since 1948. Mr. Mondale constantly evokes the name of Harry S. Truman, the 1948 winner. The other day he removed a cigar from his mouth before photographers began snapping. "Truma: cigars," he said. "Truman didn't smoke

"There's something going on in this country and the pollsters aren't getting it," Mr. Mondale said in San Francisco on Saturday. "Nobody who's been with me for the last few days and has seen these crowds, seen their response, seen their enthusiasm, seen the intensity of their response and how they respond to these issues, none who's been where I've been can help believe that there's something happening in this country."

debilitating, hasn't caused torpor in the candidate or shell shock in the staff. There's not a whiff of the polls aren't registering."

Another Mondale aide said their optimism is based on the "volatility" of the electorate, especially in California, as well as "the fact that the American public tends to focus on the presidential election in the last week

The last two weeks in the industrial Midwest and the Far West have been marked by Mr. Mondale's most vivid speeches of the campaign, his largest crowds and his most forceful attacks on Mr. Reagan. In his final week, Mr. Mondale's aides said Monday, he will seek to cement his support among wavering Democrats from the Northeast to the Midwest.

With the South virtually written off, the candidate and his running mate, Geraldine A. Ferraro, will focus their campaign, including television advertising, on states crucial to a Democratic upset.

These are Pennsylvania, California, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois and Missouri as well as New York, Minnesota and Massachusetts. > On Monday, Mr. Mondale delivered a scathing attack on the ad-ministration's human rights policy before a cheering audience of stu-dents at Portland State University

"He appointed a UN ambassador who drew a distinction between our adversaries who torture their people, and some of our so-called friends who torture people," Mr. Mondale told the crowd. "There are two ways America can be defeated, by succumbing to our enemies, or by becoming like our ene-mies. We must do neither."

At this point, Mr. Mondale is virtually deciding by himself each night what he will discuss the following day. "It's his message now. his campaign, he's controlling it." said Maxine Isaacs, the press secretary. "He's tired, of course, but he's got a lot of energy. The crowds exhilarate him. He's never experienced crowds like this before.

Ex-Astronaut Says Soviet Union May Send Men to Mars

United Press Inte WASHINGTON - There is rowing evidence that the Soviet Union plans to send men around Mars before the end of the century, perhaps in only eight years, according to a former Apollo astronaut, Harrison H. Schmitt.

His defeat would almost surely stall the statehood movement in Puerto Rico, experts say. Mr. Romero's three opponents in the race for governor have ham-mered away at him on the issue of corruption, with emphasis on the killing of the radical students.

In the summer of 1978 on a mountain named Cerro Maravilla. two advocates of independence from the United States, Carlos Enrique Soto and Arnaldo Dario Rosado, were shot to death. According to police, they were caught in a stakeout while preparing to sabotage a commercial tele-vision transmitting tower. The po-lice said they were shot and killed after they opened fire on the officers lying in wait for them.

The police were praised as heroes Senate investigators looking into a by the governor and other parts of Puerto Rican society alarmed by acts of terrorism. But leftists asserted almost from the beginning that the young men had been ambushed in a police trap to make a strong show of force against radicals. That assertion was stoutly repudiated by Mr. Romero and dismissed after investigations by the Commonwealth Justice Department and the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

But in testimony before a Puerto Rican Senate committee last year, three policemen said the two young men had been executed by their captors after having been dis-

Last week, the island's Justice Department filed first-degree murder charges in the Cerro Maravilla case against 10 policemen, includ-ing the head of police intelligence for Puerto Rico, and the Senate reopened public hearings, paying a commercial television station to carry the testimony.

Last Wednesday night the only debate between the two front-runners was televised. In it, the governor defended his administration against charges of corruption and said his program of economic recovery was better than anything offered by his opponent. Mr. Hernandez, who is now favored in the polls, would not let the murder case drop, however. Turning to face Mr. Romero, he demanded: "Why have you spent $2 million on legal fees to keep the Senate from learning the truth about the Cerro Maravilla case?" The governor shrugged off the challenge, but in an interview in his office he said that the Cerro Maravilla case had been harmed from the start by his opponents' insis-tence on exploiting it for political advantage.

This onslaught, he said, led him

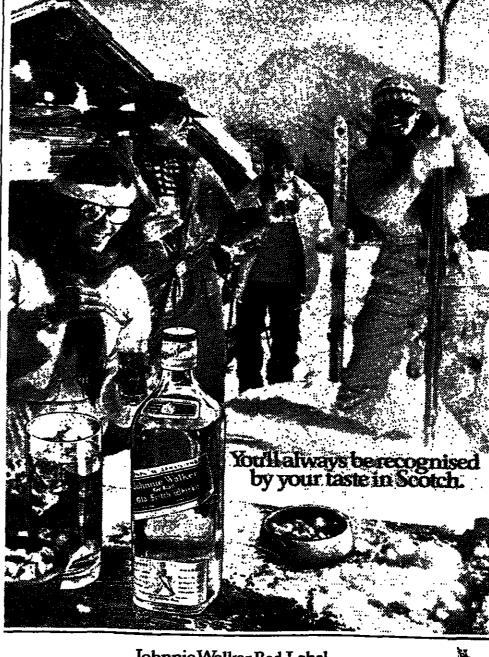

initially to believe that all the alle-gations were unfounded. "The government kept digging in its heels in the face of all the false charges that were made right from the beginning," he acknowledged. He said this had continued until the three policemen changed their testimony last year. Since then, he contended, he has

Present settings of macroeconomic policy - the way our governments design budgets and monetary conditions - bring no relief from unemployment so far as the forecaster's eye can reach. Unemployment will even get marginally worse over the coming year. Demand and output are rising too slowly to provide work for a growing labor force whose productivity is also growing.

Such strength of demand as there has been in the last year or so has come mainly from the American recovery, which is now likely to slow down without being replaced by stronger growth elsewhere.

Should the industrialized world accept this bleak prospect indefinitely, with all it implies for social and political conditions at home and in the Third World?

For several years now policies have mainly been designed to wring inflation out of the system and allow more scope for the market economy to operate free from government interference. The alternative would have been to let the world economy sink into even greater torpor under the weight of all the uncertainties that inflation and intervention from on high impose. Most Western countries rejected that alternative, and those that disagreed soon changed their minds.

Perhaps the West should now look again at its economic strategies, in the light of the prospects before us. Should we continue to rely on an unchanged mixture of tight money and budgets, confident that, once inflation has been mastered, activity will automatically turn up by some special force of self-levitation? Or should the Western countries start thinking about the possible role of monetary and budget policy as more positive instruments for supporting demand?

Fashionable opinion today is against resort to discretionary policies — the moderately flexible use of the budgetary and monetary levers --- to influence economic trends. According to this view - of which Nigel Lawson, Britain's chancellor of the Exchequer, is a lucid advocate - such policies only raise inflation. Indeed discretionary policy to encourage growth has been illapplied in the past, with harmful results. But it is not proved that it is harmful when inflation is low. Recent American expenence shows that expansionary budget policy can boost the economy enormously without rekindling inflation. It is not clear that Enrope is so different as to make the weapon inevitably injurious. Governments do have to learn from mistakes in economic management, but this learning process should not lead them into withdrawal symptoms.

We do not ask governments to pump up money income to an extent that simply serves to revive wage and price pressure and to shake business confidence further. We suggest that they start thinking carefully about how to stop unemployment from rising inexorably beyond the end of 1985.

We may well need an internationally coordinated program. Its goals should not be extravagant - perhaps not much more than trying to replace fading American recovery with an equivalent rise in demand elsewhere. The program would need to be carefully coordinated between governments, otherwise the dosage would risk being too heavy. it would have to be based on a rigorous examination of the prospects.

All this takes time, so it is not too early to begin contingency planning. Discussions running through the coming winter could prepare important action next spring, as the seven-nation economic summit approaches. It is time the discussion started.

A German Reason for Détente

By Flora Lewis

BERLIN — All the talk once again is of "the German problem." The phrase has a special meaning, not relating to the whole panoply of issues that we rry people here but to only one: the future of relations between East and West Germany.

Other German code words for this excruciatingly sensitive question include "identity," which means the legitimacy of a sense of German nationhood, or "contimuity, 'which means Bonn's involvement with the East. The straightforward word, "remification," is usually rejected as too precise, too obviously an impossible dream that would provoke a rude awakening.

Only six or seven years ago many people were saying that the dream was dead. They thought the Germans had settled down to living in two states belonging to be tile blocs, each busy with its own affairs.

That was never really true. Now the subject has resurfaced with a new emotional intensity. But to call it a gathering drive toward neutralism or resentful nationalism is not quite true either.

The feelings are deeply ambiguous. Attempts to translate the ambiguities with precision and clarity are bound to fail. But the feelings are there, gnawing at truncated West Germany, particularly but not exclusively among the newly adult generation.

Disappointment that the East German leader, Erich Houecker, abruptly put off his scheduled visit to West Germany last month sharpened the concern. But Mr. Honecker has insisted that the trip was only postponed, not canceled, and Bonn has received assurances that lower-level exchanges will continue.

Actually, the only dramatic development was Moscow's remarkably public show of firm disapproval for too-cordial ties between the two Germanys. It has provoked some strange reactions among leading West Germans who should know better, and soul-searching that reveals frustration and a flight from realism.

At a limp, far-from-successful anti-missile demon-stration the weekend before last, Oskar Lafontaine called for withdrawal of West German armed forces from NATO's integrated command — although, as with France, not from the political alliance. Mr. Lafontaine is the charismatic, rising Social Democratic leader in the Saarland, on the French border. He has great appeal for young voters and is a favorite of Willy Brandt, the aging leader of the Social Democratic Party and former chancellor.

While France and now Spain manage to keep a certain distance from America's military primacy in the alliance with the non-integration formula, no alert politician can imagine that it would be possible for West Germany. Whatever the Western response, and almost surely it would include departure of U.S. troops from West Germany, there would certainly be an explosion of fury from Moscow. The last thing it would tolerate would be a strong, national German army allied to the United States but not under its command.

But youth who don't consider the consequences think Mr. Lafontaine's notion would mean "greater independence." No one has explained to them how impossibly provocative it is. They speak of a desire to "more German," supposing it would enhance chances for peace. They cannot say what they would want their country to do that it cannot do in NATO. They take the most extravagant of President Reagan's words seriously and claim that their country would look better disassociated from U.S. "adventurism."

These people are not making policy. But they are making opinion, at a time when revulsion is spreading against all the politicians in Bonn. "We are getting it now from the left and from the right," said a moderate member of the legislature. "The left talks about some kind of romantic cooperation with East Germany and the right talks about restoring Germany."

Ironically, the East Germans, whose society exists under strict Soviet constraints, do not seem to feel the same psychological burden on their nationality. They consider themselves vastly superior to their Russian allies in all but brute power, which they endure. But a number of West Germans complain of being "too Americanized," and they seem to feel inferior.

The hard fact is that the division of Germany and Europe can at best be eased with greater contacts and small accords: it cannot be overcome in foreseeable circumstances. But the frustrations and dangerous illusions this nourishes among Germans are also hard facts. The interest of other countries in East and West, including the Soviet Union and America, is to move back toward détente so as to relieve these pressures.

The Democrats Lack a Regional Base

WASHINGTON — Going into the last week of the campaign, Ronald Reagan has just a little over 50 percent of the vote in several na-tional polls. A party with no base has to scurry pretty furiously to and liberal on economics, they win, with very little margin for error. looked like candidates for a new win, with very little margin for error. So it is important to understand what happened to the bases of the past. The "Solid South": That has been missing a long time. The last time the South voted solidly for a Democrat was in 1944. Democrats lost their near-monopoly on the white Southern vote when they supported civil rights in the 1960s; for a while they lost the white Southern vote altogether. Jimmy Carter got a lot of it back, a result. (Ironically, the big spenders but not a majority, not even in 1976.

Race is no longer the issue that the early 1970s — including yes, keeps white Southerners voting ReRonald Reagan in California.) State publican in presidential contests. and federal tax cuts have in turn Economics does. Southern whites are stimulated the high-tech industries increasingly affluent and out of sympathy with high taxes and government programs for the poor. And they have attitudes on cultural issues (traditional) and foreign policy (hawkish) that predispose them against national Democrats. Mr. Mondale will get some white Southern votes, but there is no prospect for a solid Democratic South.

The industrial belt: The decaying of the Democratic coalition in the industrial belt from New York through New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois and Missouri is an old story. Ethnic minorities have long since moved socially upward and political-ly to the right; there are fewer union members and blue-collar workers; no one gets his Christmas turkey from a political machine any longer.

There are not enough people left in big cities to deliver the "traditional" majorities registered most recently in 1960 and 1964. These states were among those most closely contested by Franklin Roosevelt and the Re-publicans in the 1940s, but they are not going to be a safe Democratic base any time soon.

The McGovern eight: The eight states in which George McGovern did best in 1972 run along the northern tier and the West Coast - Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, South Dako-ta, Oregon and California. None was lem: He is not leading, so far as the polls disclose, in a single state.

The fact that Mr. Mondale's base a traditional post-Civil War Democratic state; there was no overlap with the South or the industrial belt. High-income, well-educated, hightech states, dovish on foreign policy Democratic base. Mr. Mondale has been running close to Mr. Reagan in all but South Dakota, but he still seems to be behind in each. One reason is that economic issues have turned against the Democrats there. Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin and California all had tax-cut movements - and saw their local economies improve as that are so visible, especially, in Cal fornia and Massachusetts.

A dozen years ago highly educated electorates saw the Vietnam War and environmental depredation as threats to their future, and looked to government to tame them. Today they increasingly see high tech and computers as the promise of the future and look to private capital formation to provide them. A Democratic Party bent on subsidizing jobs in the auto and steel industries is a threat to this future; a Republican Party bent on leaving capital in the hands of investors is what they want - and they are willing to overlook the rantings of the Moral Majority to get it.

Mr. Mondale's most recent ad attacking the Reagan "Star Wars" nu-clear defense illustrates the Democrats' problems. You see a picture of Earth taken from space, and then whirring computers and blinking lights, with an ominous voice warning of the danger of war. An unspo-ken assumption of this ad is that high-tech machinery is scary and ominous. But to whom? Republican strategists believe that Mr. Reagan's argument in the Kansas City debate that this new technology can prevent nuclear destruction may prove plausible to many of those voters who see the computer as their friend.

A dozen years ago, among educated Americans, new technology seemed frightening; it brought death in war and destruction of the environment. Now, in a time of peace and a nation that has cleaned up its air and water, new technology seems more friendly and promisi ore friendly and promising.
The Democrats have failed to capture the imagination of the educated people who, in contrast to those of a dozen years ago, believe that sci-ence, technology, free enterprise and America are good things.

So in the final campaign weeks neither the McGovern eight nor the industrial belt nor the South provides a comfortable base for Mr. Mondale -a bloc of electoral votes to balance those Mr. Reagan has in the Rocky Mountains, the Great Plains and the fastest-growing states in the South (Florida, Texas, Virginia).

The European Economy: Tortoise Beating Hare?

slow progress in its recovery from the 1980-82 recession, which was proximately caused by the second oil shock and the international repercussions of U.S. financial policies. In 1984 the growth of EC production is expected to be a useful but modest 2.2 percent, which contrasts with a spectacular 6 percent or more in the United States. The EC Commission expects a similar moderate EC growth rate of 2.1 percent next year, while the United States is expected to return to something more like a trend growth rate of 3 percent, Employment continues to stagnate in Europe, whereas it has been growing fast in the United States. Why are these short-run experi-ences so different? Does the slower and steadier European business cycle cover underlying changes in economic policy? Is there an element of the parable of the tortoise and the hare in the EC-United States comparison?

The full reply to these questions will be seen only with the passage of time. But three incontrovertible facts must in large measure explain the difference in short-run performances.

• The United States has had a definitely expansionary fiscal policy, whereas Europe has on the whole opted for reducing budget deficits now rather than at some distant and uncertain point in the future. This has boosted output in the short run in the United States and been contractionary in Europe. The long-run story may well be different.

• The United States has let its exchange rate float up to a very high level, under the influence of high interest rates, which in turn have been largely driven up by the budget defi-cit. Europe has been a reluctant part-ner in this, decoupling its interest rates as far as possible, with the ECU's exchange rate depreciating as a result. These exchange rate move-ments have had the effect of redis-tributing world inflation, beliging tributing world inflation, helping suppress inflationary tensions that the fast U.S. growth might cause and by the same token slowing progress in reduction of inflation in Europe.

The very striking contrast in employment performance comes from a combination of long- and short-run trends. For two decades now the United States has been adding an average 2 percent per year to its total number of persons employed, whereas the EC average has hardly increased at all. These long-run trends have also been manifest in increasing investment in Europe for "capital-deepening" and labor-saving purposes, whereas this has not been evident in America. In addition the short-run propensity of firms to take on extra employees when the busi-

These three major facts lead us to consider underlying questions at the European end of the comparisons. Why did Europe choose stricter budgetary policies? How has Europe responded to the problems caused by the dollar's appreciation? Why has the employment record in Europe been so disappointing, and what is Europe doing about it? Do the answers to these questions add up to a coherent economic policy?

Budgetary strategy has two major components: the size of the public sector (tax and expenditure levels) and the size of the budget deficit.

Public expenditure and taxation have grown inexorably in the past 25 years, now averaging 52 percent of gross domestic product for public expenditure in the EC—way above 37 percent in America and 36 percent in Japan. The conclusion has been widely drawn that this public-sector growth trend was part of the reason for the European economy's progressively stagnating growth.

It now seems that 1984 will prove in fact to be a historical turning point: the year in which public expenditure was constrained to grow less fast than gross domestic product. The idea that tax cuts are now re-quired as a long-run supply-side mea-sure of economic reform, rather than for short-term demand stimulation, has also become common ground across the political spectrum.

Several governments have their strategies targeted on tax cuts. The British government, in its 1984-85 budget, cut payroll and corporate in-come taxes (the latter announced in advance for four successive years). The West German government has just announced personal income tax cuts worth more than I percent of GDP to take effect in 1986-88. The French government has set itself the objective of reducing the tax and public expenditure burden by I per-cent of GDP in 1985.

A key point about all these cases is that the governments first took steps to master the budget deficit and public debt trend, and then to embark on tax cuts only in conditions that would not imperif this "consolidation" effort, to use the current German phraseology. Great care is being taken to assure the internal coherence of budgetary and monetary policies. This contrasts with U.S. budgetary policy. While the United States is reaping dramatic output gains at present, the European judgment has been that Europe's steadier and sus-tainable financial policies will pay dividends over a period of years. A Black Way in South Africa

By Gatsha Buthelezi

The writer is the Zulu chief and leader of Inkatha, the largest black South African organization.

U LUNDI, South Africa — Black South Africans, like people the world over, struggle with fortitude against adverse circumstances until a sense of hopelessness, a prospect of suffering stretching indefinitely into the future arouses their anger. Angry behavior becomes irrational, and when people have little to lose they may risk much in angry outbursts. If outsiders are concerned about injustice in South Africa, if they are concerned about encouraging de-mocracy here and about South Africa's ability to put its house in order so it can become a source of stability and development for this whole subcontinent, they should recognize that they need to support black leaders and organizations that aim to give people some-thing constructive to do, that not only alleviate immediate suffering but mobilize forces working toward building up the black position at the negotiating table.

Outsiders need to be aware of the danger of supporting only protest politics, which arouse anger but do not direct it toward achievable goals. I believe that the U.S. State Department has yet to realize that "constructive engagement" in South Africa means more than dealing engagement" in South Africa means more than dealing with the South African government as a recognized government while also visibly identifying with protest politics in some kind of foreign policy balancing act.

During the 1976-78 period of unrest in South Africa, the media in North America and Europe hailed the violence as a real threat to the status quo, and they applauded protest leaders in the forefront of the violence in black urban areas. What was in fact a predictable eruption in an ongoing volatile situation was seen as a change in the course of events in the country. Those blacks who claimed that spartheid was on the run and that the government would soon be toppled were believed, and a great deal of moral support and aid worth millions of dollars flowed into South Africa from North American and European sources.

History has now shown that those hopes were mis-placed and that the eruption of violence in 1976-78 caused hardly a hiccup in government programs meant to further entrench apartheid and strengthen the National Party's grasp on the country.

Even at the height of the 1976-78 disturbances, and again now, there is no evidence whatever that black township anger can spill across apartheid's black-white boundaries and affect those who enjoy the benefits of apartheid. On no occasion then or now have white neighborhoods been threatened; on no occasion then or now have calls for boycotts and work stoppages, which always accompany eruptions of violence, had any material effect on white well-being or on the economy. Black anger then and now feeds upon itself and draws blacks into black-vs.-black confrontations more than it threatens the status quo.

Serious analysts of the situation must come to terms with the fact that the government is strong enough, and white South Africa is protected enough, to enable the status quo to withstand onslanght after onslaught of the kind I am discussing without entertaining any serious need to capitulate to black demands. Violent confrontations are not geared to bringing the government to the negotiating table. They are geared to reducing the country to an ungovernable condition and to bringing about the downfall of the National Party in circumstances that would lead to the formation of a government for the majority.

However justified that goal is, and whatever rights the majority, who happen to be black, do have to form the government, history has by now taught us that violence that can be contained by measures involving nothing more than mobilization of the ordinary police force does not really threaten the status quo and perhaps only acts as a safety valve for apartheid. Those who made the wrong assessment of the South African situation in 1976-78 show all the signs of making the same mistakes now. The tragedy we face is that the widespread violence, loss of black life and limb and destruction of black property will be to no avail.

I say these things as a black, deeply angered at the inhumanity of apartheid and its terrible injustices. I say them not because I reject black anger, not because I do not understand violent reactions to our oppression and not because I do not sympathize with those who are angry. I say them because anger is black South Africa's greatest asset. We simply cannot afford to waste it. Black anger must be directed toward constructive, achievable goals, not squandered on the streets of our townships in black-vs.-black confrontations. The country's 22 million blacks must face the fact that they have two clear-cut alternatives. One is to mount an armed struggle and literally go to war against apartheid. The other is to bring about radical changes inside the country through democratic opposition to apartheid and through the politics of negotiation.

The South African situation differs radically from situations in which the people of Zimbabwe, Mozambique and Angola found themselves. It is a myth to believe that the African National Congress's mission in exile will mount the kind of armed struggle against apartheid that will force the South African government to capitulate as the white governments in Zimbabwe, Mozambique and Angola had to capitulate. The circumstances in South Africa are radically different.

If change is ever achieved in South Africa through tiplence was will find that the formations of the factors of the factors.

plence, we will find that the foundations of the future will have been destroyed in the course of liberating the country. We have the choice of whether or not to employ that degree of violence. There are, in fact, many who have made this choice and who believe that the country must be reduced to ashes so that a new start can one day be made. I understand the anger that leads to this kind of desperation, but I reject it, and the vast majority of black South Africans reject it. I do not believe we have to destroy the foundations of the future to bring about radical change. I believe ways and means can be found to build up black bargaining power to force whites to negotiate. I am not alone in holding this view; it is endorsed by millions of black South Africans. For the vast majority of blacks, the struggle has always been for inclusion in the existing South Africa; it has always been to transform the state rather than destroy and rebuild it.

Inkatha, the organization I lead, solidly supports these principles. It now has a card-carrying membership of close to a million people, which makes it the largest black constituency ever to have been formed in the country. Inkatha emerged as a political force in the 1976-78 disruptions. It was formed as an expression of black anger, and it has not only survived the tough years since 1976, but each year it has grown in strength. Outsiders need to understand that because black South Africans are faced with polar opposite choices between the negotiating table and the employment of violence, and because there is no easy victory in either choice, disputes rage about what should be done. Inkatha is committed to the politics of negotiation; so is the West. Inkatha is committed to doing everything that can be done to avoid violent confrontations; so is the West. Inkatha is committed to bringing about radical change without destroying the foundations of the future; the West should support this commitment. Inkatha recognizes that political changes that do not bring about better living conditions for the majority of people are worthless. The West should agree. The Washington Post.

A Brutal Reply to Tutu A South African government that wished to could have made much of the award of the

Agca, Moscow, the West

Nobel Peace Prize to Bishop Desmond Tutu, a black champion of equal rights. Ideally it would have identified itself with his longing for a decisive turn away from the racist apartheid system. Without undue strain, it could have expressed favor for his personal qualities of compassion, justice and peacefulness. At the least it could have made sure that for a decent interval it would do nothing to heighten the contrast between Bishop Tutu's standards of public discourse and its own.

South Africa did none of that. It sent a 7,000-strong force into three black townships south of Johannesburg to look, ostensibly, for subversives, security threats and revolutionaries. Armed phalanxes ransacked the homes and disrupted the lives of nearly a quarter of a million people and found only a few hundred suspected pass-law violators and petty criminals. Not one security arrest was announced, but perhaps that is beside the authorities' evident point: to demonstrate that. Nobel Prize notwithstanding, outsiders cannot tell the masters of apartheid how to run their domain.

What is also demonstrated is the poor political and historical judgment underlying South African police rule. If there were a Nobel Political Boorishness Award, South Africa would long ago have retired the trophy. It is not simply that its timing is bad; its under-standing of its own dilemma is bad. Bishop Tutu is among those blacks — Gatsha Buthelezi is another (he comments on this page today) — who are ready and able to speak for their people if the white leadership had the sense to open a dialogue. For it can only be through people such as the bishop and the Zulu tribal chief that white South Africans can ensure a place in the country they share. But the ruling whites rely on force and slap down the hand that reasonable non-white leaders extend. The United States abstained on Oct. 23 in the Security Council's otherwise unanimous condemnation of these raids. The Reagan administration does not yet have a clear voice in which to make it plain that in applying its theory it is not simply coddling racists. This is a grievous defect in the policy of any nation that claims to speak for freedom.

1909: Signs of Disorder in Greece PARIS - If the meager despatches from Athens are to be believed, the naval revolt in Greece has been nipped in the bud. The rebel officers who had seized the arsenal and the torpedo flotilla took flight while the crews made their submission. Four of the officers were arrested. The ringleader, Captain Typaldos, is still at large. The members of the Military League met at the house of the President, Colonel Zorbas, and renewed their oath of fidelity to the King, the Constitution and the legal Government of the country. The state of affairs revealed by recent events proves the existence of a condition of national demoralization not far removed from anarchy.

1934: Police Face Student Radicals LOS ANGELES — The riot squad of this city's police department was rushed to the campus of the University of California when 2,000 students gathered in a threatening group outside the administrative offices, in which five students, suspended for an alleged plot to "turn the university over to Communism," were being given a hearing. When the police arrived, the milling students dispersed peace-ably, singing the Alma Mater. University Provost E.C. Moore said the Radical students had persisted in maintaining an open forum in the face of faculty objections, attempting "to destroy the university by handing it over to an organized group of Communist students."

Europeans and Reagan Regarding the opinion column

"Why Once-Leery Europeans Are Pulling for Reagan" (Oct. 24):

Mr. Reagan has my vote and sup-port, but I feel it important to point out to readers of Michael Harrison's column that, while governments may want to see Mr. Reagan re-elected, support for him among ordinary Europeans is far from strong. There is genuine fear that his economic and foreign policies are bad for Europeans. His support is heavily concentrated in the upper social strata, which constitute a minority.

PETER RENE AMREIN.

Mr. Harrison, in a litany of unsubstantiated impressions, suggests that Europeans await a Reagan re-elec-tion with some enthusiasm. However, was unable to find any objective evidence in his column to sustain his conclusions. If there is a more positive attitude among Europeans toward a second Reagan term (which is very debatable), it may reflect a certain resignation to what to many people appears inevitable.

I cannot claim to speak for European public opinion, but there is cer-tainly profound disquiet across a broad political spectrum in many West European countries about Mr. Reagan's arms control policies. In Britain, opinion polls suggest that public opposition to cruise missiles has increased since deployment. And there is evidence that around 80 percent of the British public support the concept of a nuclear freeze.

The study of international relations may not be an exact science but surely academics have some responsibility to back up their opinions with supporting data. Otherwise they lose their credibility.

The lawlessness has increased the hazards of life in leftist-con-trolled West Beirut. Kidnappings are increasing,

One abduction that particularly upset the foreign community last week was the 30-hour detention of four Lebanese employees of The Associated Press news agency. After their release, the four, none of whom is a journalist, said they did not believe their abduction was po-

A number of U.S. diplomatic employess had been evacuated from Beirut for fear of a new attack on U.S. interests in Lebanon. And shortly after the abduction last week, the State Department in Washington said U.S. residents in Beirut, even those not in official positions, had become targets.

There is speculation that Islamic Jihad, which has claimed responsibility for two bombings of the U.S. Embassy and the deaths of nearly 300 U.S. and French servicemen in twin suicide bombings in October last year, now aims to influence the U.S. presidential election.

"The Americans are seething over Islamic Jihad," said one Arab political commentator who recently returned from the United States. "I am sure they are planning retaliation but they won't do that until the election is over."

L PASO, Texas — It's 5 A.M., still dark. and there's a chill in the air. For a Border Patrol agent, John Tiliti, who works the Rio Grande, the game has been going on since

He knows that if he shines a flashlight near any of the many holes in the border fence, he will spot a few illegal immigrants. They know that if they run back to the river toward Mexico, he won't bother to pick them up.

By 7 A.M., the game begins to tilt in favor of the immigrants. At each hole in the "Tortilla Curtain," large groups of "illegals" have gathered along the river's concrete edge. Both sides realize that there is safety in numbers. If Mr. Tiltti comes near, the immigrants do little more than back away. Some even smile and wave. "Most of them cross every day. It's a game to piggyback through the water. El Paso starts out rich at the northern end and gets poorer toward the border; Juarez starts poor at the river and gets even poorer further south. So there is little to distinguish the bustling but sleazy areas of southern El Paso from their Juarez counterparts across the river. It looks like one community, and many Juarez residents treat it as such.

They sleep in Juarez and work in El Paso. If they don't have a border pass, they commute across the river. If someone like Mr. Tiltti catches them and returns them to Mexico, they'll be back in hours.

Added to them are the Mexicans and other Latin Americans who plan to make the United States their home. They are more likely to head for the interior and settle in a city with a large Hispanic community such as Los Angeles, Denver, Dallas or New York.

This is the immigration problem that Congress has tried but failed to resolve for the last

Last year, the Border Patrol apprehended more than one million illegal aliens. Nobody knows how many more slipped through. Many believe that the Border Patrol will never be enough to counteract the lure of jobs.

You can earn as much in a day here as in two weeks over there," says Mr. Tiltii. pointing to Representative Ronald Coleman, a Democrat

Mr. Tiltti, the son of Finnish immigrants, has been on the job for 15 years. Before that, he drove a truck in New York. "I like to drive." he

By dawn, the immigrants are coming over thick and fast.

"There's about half a dozen crossing Paisano and another half a dozen going west down the access road," Mr. Tiltti radios headquarters.

"It's no problem to catch aliens; they're all over the place," he explains. "We know where they're crossing and where they're going. It's just a matter of how many people we have working that day as to how many we catch."

Most days, the El Paso patrol picks up be-tween 600 and 800 aliens. Mr. Tiltti estimates that this is about 20 percent of those crossing each day, or one in five. Mr. Richardson is slightly more optimistic; he puts it closer to one in three. But it is difficult to calculate and is complicated by the fact that the same person may be apprehended twice or even three times a of Mr. Tiltti's car to be herded into a van. "It's nothing." Mr. Tiltti replies in Spanish.

Stationed in a parking lot on the hillside, with a good view of the river, Mr. Tiltti surveys the scene through a pair of binoculars.

"There's just too many of them and not enough of us." he muses. There'll be 40 or 50 coming in at the same time. If I was there, I'd only catch five or six. The best you can hope for is that they run south back to Mexico. Then at least they didn't get in while you were there."

It is hard to avoid cynicism. "Every now and then, I get bored with it," he says, "the same old faces, the same old game. If you put them in jail occasionally, they know it's not a game. We do it just to let them know we're still in control." But, apparently, they're not in control.

"I know," he admits, "but we don't want to let

The sand hill team on the ground, which tries to stop people crossing the desert, also uses underground sensors. These detect vibrations on the surface, telling the team where the desert-

Given limited resources, the Border Patrol has chosen to focus on preventing two things: the smuggling of people for money and the influx of aliens to the interior. "If you're talking about going to the interior and don't want to have to ride the freight trains or hitchhike, the chances are you'll have to use an organized smuggling ring," says Mr. Richardson. That can be expensive. "You can talk thousands of dollars a piece, and when they handle hundreds of thousands of people, that's a lot of money," he said. TETTING out of El Paso is a lot harder than crossing the border, but the chances are still about 50-50, according to Border Patrol estimates. A Vietnam Memorial: Letters From Veterans

New York Times Service

TEW YORK — If you are able, save for them a place inside of you... In Viet-nam, on New Year's Day 1970, Major Michael Davis O'Donnell began a poem with those words. Three months later, the 24-yearold helicopter pilot was reported missing in

Now his poem, contributed by his sister, is being considered for New York City's Vietnam Veterans Memorial in lower Manhattan. The words that American soldiers wrote from the battlefields and base camps of Vietnam, along with the news they received from home, will be etched on a plain glass wall 70 feet long (about 20 meters) and 14 feet high.

Since appealing for contributions last May, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Commission has heard from nearly 100 former servicemen, their families and friends, who have sent about 250 items. They are mostly letters, but there are also poems, discharge papers, clippings and a holy card on which a short-timer's calendar was

How are you feeling today? Hope this letter will find you successfully recovering. Today we received your "Purple Heart" medal. I looked at it with mixed emotions. Happy, because you are out of Viet Nam; sad, because of the price you had to pay to get away from there. However, I do hope that you wont have any serious complications and that you will fully recover and be restored to health.

I also realize the thousands of boys who will never return home, and the parents who have received the "Purple Heart" because of their sons death. When I think of these things, I know that I should't feel too bad about your condition. Our main concern now is your recovery!

Let me say hear and now that I'm extremely proud of you, son. Not because you were awarded the "Heart," but because you did an honorable thing. I know that you were bitterly against going into the service and rejected our reasons for being in Viet Nam.

I also know of your feelings about the U.S. and its treatment of Negroes. I also imagine that you were contemplating going to AWOL. Yet, in spite of these conditions you did everything that was asked of you. Whether it was to please your mother or your grandmother I do not

But I do know that you made a prudent and honorable decision. It may not matter at all to you, but you are coming home a hero to us. Not a war hero, because you had to fight and get shot, but more so because you made a mans decision, and stuck it out.

You should feel proud of yourself! You are now in a position to take every advantage that is offered to a GI (and there are many). You can hold your head high everywhere you go, and you can go anywhere you wish. Had you chosen the alternative, these things would not be so.

I hope Richard will realize these things and take that "chip" off of his shoulders! Everyone here is so concerned about you, all of our friends constantly ask about you. Everyone at St. Rita knows that youve been wounded. Your mother told one person about you on the telephone, and a few days later the whole parish knew. Certainly will be glad when you are sent stateside. I hope it will be St. Albans or in the near vicinity. Let us know as soon as you find out.

Excerpts From Letters by Lieutenant Marion Lee "Sandy" Kempaer to His Family in Galves-

Aug. 7, 1966 1 have just given a class on ambushes. I was chosen because of my charm, intelligence and messianic-like personality, and besides, I am the only graduate of the Basic School besides the Captain in the whole company and therefore have all the books.

So I gave a brilliant dissertation on the fine art and the finer points of committing maybem from a hidden position on unsuspecting and probably innocent people to a sea of young and blank faces.

As I finished there were resounding cries of "Bravo," "Encore," etc., flowers were thrown, and I was carried off to my tent by my audience. As I think I might have stated, my Sergeant got my people into shape and they are now obeying orders without question as exampled by the

We have been doing a lot of work in the villages lately, of the community development type, so it looks as though I will never get away from my Peace Corps day.

We must really be messing up these people's minds: by day we treat their ills and fix up their children and deliver their babies and by night. if we receive fire from the general direction of their hamlet, fire generally will reach them albeit not intentionally; they must really be going around in circles. But I guess that just points up the strangeness of this war. We have two hands, both of which know what the other is doing, but does the opposite anyway, and in the same obscure and not too reasonable manner — it all makes sense.

Sorry to be so long in writing, but I have just come back from an abortion called Operation Jackson and I spent a three-day's "walk in the sun" (and paddies and fields and mountains and impenetrable jungle and sawgrass and ants. and screwed-up radios and no word, and deal radio operators, and no chow, and too many C-rations, and blisters & torn trousers and jungle rot, and wet socks and sprained ankles and no heels, and, and, and.) for a Battalion that walked on roads and dykes the whole way and a Regiment that didn't even know where the Battalion was, finished off by a 14,000 meter forced march on a hard road.

My God, the epic poems I could write to that ambrosia of Marine Corps cuisine - peanut butter and/or hot coffee after three days of that." The only person in the whole Battalion to see a V.C. was, of course, me.

I was walking along a trail doing a village sweep all alone and here comes Charlie, rifle in hand with not a care in the world until he sees me, and then it's a race to see if he can get off the road before I can draw my .45 and get off an accurate shot (he won). Of course, there was an incident when four snipers took on the Battalion which promptly. more to release the weight of all that unexpended ammunition than anything else, threw everything at them but the Missouri: and that would have been there too, except it could not get up the Sang Tra Bong. So goes about $50,000 worth of ammo. They probably played it up as a second Iwo Jima at home, but it wasn't.

From the hospital at Chu Lai, after being wounded by a carbine round in an ambush.

wounded by a carbine round in an ambush.

I am lying in bed here and it comes time for that most thrilling event, "when the General gives out the Purple Hearts". The General in this case is a 2 star type named General Fields, who is also Div. O. and a big, gruff, hearty type whose first words to me were "Aren't you the one who wrote on that form that supplies weren't getting to the troops? Do you have any specific examples?"

So, what the hell, I gave him a few, and he predictably enough, cut me off, explaining how the folks back home were having to be forced to make utilities and in a very small voice I pointed out that a great deal of the problem was right Well by and have fun here in River City.

He ignored that and never stopped smiling although it got a little forced after awhile, and his entourage stood around with little grins etched into their empty faces which occasionally laughed heartily whenever the General made a funny, which was signalled by his own chuck-ling. All in all, it was a dreadful performance by everyone, but in a way, a classic of stereotype characters and situations I have watched acted out much to my growing concern. They finally left me sicker than I was before and with a medal I never wanted anyway.

This morning, my platoon and I were finishing up a three day patrol. Struggling over steep hills covered with hedgerows, trees, and generally impenetrable jungle, one of my men turned to me and pointed a hand, filled with cuts and scratches, at a rather distinguished looking plant with soft red flowers waving gayly in the downpour, (which had been going on ever since the patrol began), and said, "That is the first plant I have seen today which didn't have thorns on it." I immediately thought of you.

The plant and the hill upon which it grew, was also representative of Viet Nam. It is a country of thorns and cuts, of guns and marauding, of little hope and of great failure, yet in the midst of it all, a beautiful thought, gesture and even person can arise among it waving bravely at the death that pours down upon it.

Some day this hill will be burned by napalm, and the red flower will crackle up and die among the thorns. So what was the use of it living and being a beauty among the beasts, if it must, in the end, die because of them, and with them? This is a question which is answered by Ger-trude Stein's "A rose is a rose is a rose." You are what you are, what you are. Whether you believe in God, fate, or the crumbling cookie, elements are so mixed in a being that make him what he is; his salvation from the thorns around him lies in the fact that he existed at all, in his very own

For though this may appear to be a play about the horrors of Cape Town apartheid and the shameful way in which a young man on his way to England can suddenly have his passport denied because he has been reclassified as "non-European," Harwood has been away from all of that for a very long time and it is quite clear that his interest, if a more than adequate reproduction he's only ever going to make it as of such set-pieces as "The Barber's half of a double. not all of his sympathy, is now with the British expatriates trying to make sense or at least find comfort that opens Act II, it becomes clear that Harwood has nowhere much to go and nothing much to add to what we already know: the teacher, of course, betrays his pupil just as he has always betrayed his friends and his own destiny, the wife goes on drinking, the pupil goes on to his own tragedy and the houseboy is left singing us a little song. Some-how, despite the dexterity of David Jones's marvelous production and Timothy O'Brien's tactfully allgray set, the sense of anticlimax is overwhelming: we have started out on a novel and finished up with a short story, but for all that I'd not be inclined to miss a moment of it.

NYSE Stages a Spirited Rally

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches NEW YORK — Stock prices staged a spirit-ed rally Tuesday, getting a boost from falling open-market interest rates.
Auto and financial-services stocks joined a variety of other blue-chip issues at the forefront of the advance.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which had fallen 24.52 points over the past six sessions, rebounded 15.90, to 1,217.31 Volume on the New York Stock Exchange stepped up to 95.20 million shares from Mon-day's three-week low of 63.20 million. Interest rates on both short- and long-term government securities tumbled in the credit markets Tuesday, resuming their decline of the past several weeks.

Short-term Treasury bill rates dropped more than one-tenth of a percentage point. Prices of long-term government bonds, which rise when rates decline, moved up more than $10 for every $1,000 in face value. Analysts also noted that the stock market held its ground Monday at the 1,200 level in the Dow Jones industrial average, suggesting that many traders found stocks an attractive buy at that point.

But they said several uncertainties continued to weigh on the market - most notably the

Now, the pace is quicker, the scope is wider. Local and national barriers are down. The world's the limit.

For people whose lives extend beyond national boundaries, one newspaper is essential: the International Herald Tribune, read by more than a third of a million business and professional leaders in 164 countries.

The Trib looks at the broad spectrum of world news and tells the leadership community what it needs to know. Global coverage from a global viewpoint. Concise. Intelligent. Objective.

Its worldwide news-gathering network includes the vast editorial resources of its parent papers, the New York Times and the Washington Post. And its range is comprehensive: politics and economics, business and finance, sports and science, the arts and humor. All succinctly edited in Paris from a uniquely international perspective — then sped to 7 printing sites around the world using the latest in satellite technology.

The result: more world news in less reading time, to meet the needs of time-pressured decision-makers everywhere. Subscribe now and save up to 42% off the newsstand price (turn page for details). Blessings of Being an MBA Are Very Mixed in Europe

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

ARIS - The day on which holders of European Master in Business Administration degrees take over corporate Europe is still far off. There are only 1,500 European MBAs graduated a year, compared to 60,000 in the United States. And many large European multinationals don't want to hire MBAs, anyway. They're too expensive, they don't fit in and they're too arrogant, according to these companies, which generally prefer their own home-grown managers. "Old cliches die hard," says Jean-Pierre Salzmann, director of communications at Insead, the European Institute of Business Administra-

On the other hand, many European MBAs don't want to work for the large European groups. They are attracted by U.S.

companies offering more glamorous positions or by smaller European companies offering immediate responsibility. At Insead, which produces 20 percent of Europe's MBAs, 30 to 35 percent of the companies recruiting in June were subsidiaries of U.S. mul-

If an MBA is given $100 one day, he may show up the next day with $200.

But there are some recent MBA converts among large European companies: BASF AG, Hoechst AG, and Volkswagen AG of West Germany; Peugeot SA of France. and Imperial Chemical Industries Ltd. of Britain.

The companies are looking for brains in an MBA, but he or she must also be an international and entrepreneurial type. "What I like is the type of people at Insead. You have the feeling that if you drop some of them in the middle of nowhere with a $100 they'll show up the next day with $200," says Juergen F. Kammer, finance director at BASF AG.

F some large European companies are giving MBAs a try, others that are reorganizing into smaller business units, like British Petroleum PLC's group of companies, or that are growing fast, like Club Mediterranée SA of France, have not included MBAs in their new strategic planning. "You don't change a football team when they are winning," says Patricia Mortaigne of Club Med.

The No. I negative is that MBAs are expensive. "With the current recession, MBAs are an expensive luxury. A boom in MBAs has to reflect a general boom in the economy," says a BP

Because European companies can't fire most people overnight. when they invest in an MBA they may be investing in an expensive commodity for the next 20 to 30 years.

The No. 2 negative is that MBAs don't fit in. What many European giants want are home-grown employees who are true believers in the company's corporate culture. "A big company has a culture of its own, so there is some difficulty with some MBA coming in," says a spokeswoman for Royal Dutch/Shell Group. Shell hires five to six MBAs a year.

Many companies have in-house programs to train the employ-ee in the right culture, and in technical and management skills. Siemens AG, for instance, spends 500 million Deutsche Marks ($163.4 million) a year on in-house training.

The No. 3 negative is that MBAs are too arrogant. "The MBA is usually an asset for the company. But sometimes [being] an MBA leads to too much ambition too soon, a overestimation of one's capabilities and of one's knowledge," says Michelle Rembry, director of social development at Générale Biscuit, the Operating within rigid hierarchical pay structures, companies often can't offer an MBA what he or she wants to earn or do. "We can't put an MBA into general management on day one. There is a conflict of interest there," says Roger Sleeman, group manager of staff development at BAT Industries PLC, the third largest British company in terms of sales.

Several British companies have what they call "high-flyer" programs. Instead of hiring an MBA, these companies select "high-flyers" with a few years experience in the company and then send them to middle management courses. It's less risky and it's less expensive.

Japan Sets Big Trade Surplus

Exports Rise 14.7% in Year

TOKYO — Japan's current ac-count surplus widened sharply to $4.35 billion in September from $1.23 billion in August and compared with a $2.66-billion surplus a year earlier, the Finance Ministry said Tuesday.

trade in both merchandise and handise trade, such as ser-

Japan's merchandise trade surplus in September widened to a record $5.22 billion from $2.22 billion in August, the ministry said. The previous record trade surplus was $4.89 billion last June.

Exports climbed 14.7 percent from $12.63 billion last September to $14.48 billion last September to $14.48 billion to $14.48 bill rose slightly, from $9.24 billion to $9.26 billion. "If this trend continues, we will have to watch out for more trade friction," an economist at a major Japanese bank said.

The United States, Europe and Japan's Asian neighbors have all been pressing Japan to take steps to reduce its trade surplus by further opening its markets to imports. September's exports rose largely in response to the continued recovery of the world economy, especially in the United States, the econo-goods and cars accounted for much of the export growth, he said. Japanese vehicle exports rose 5.6 percent in September from 482,200 units in September 1983 to 509,000 this September, the Japan Automomist said. Rising sales of electrical bile Association said. The September nonmerchandise trade deficit narrowed to $774 million from $896 million in August and compared with a year-earlier deficit of $655 million.

■ Leading Indicator Falls

Japan's economy is likely to soften in the near future, according to the leading indicator released Tues-day by the Economic Planning Agency, The Associated Press re-ported Tuesday from Tokyo. An agency official, however, said he believes that temporary factors distorted the indicator into its most negative reading in 18 months.

The leading indicator for August, the latest reporting month, fell to 25, after holding at 50 for three straight months. According to the agency, a drop below 50 implies that the economy is weakening. The last time that the indicator fell below 50 was in February

An agency official cited several factors that he said temporarily made the indicator appear weaker. First was an influx of crude-oil imports in August, ahead of a tax increase on oil imports that went into effect Sept. 1. The import surge inflated data on raw-materi-als inventories, he said. Also, domestic new-car registrations rose in August ahead of another tax boost in September, he said.

Higher Output, But More Jobless Are Seen in U.K.

LONDON — Manufactur-ing industry in Britain expects demand, output and exports to increase over the next four months, along with prices and unemployment, the Confedera-tion of British Industry said Tuesday.

Business confidence remains low, but the employers' organi-zation blamed this on the pro-tracted coal miners' strike and the weakness of the pound. In its latest quarterly survey, the group said the economic recov-ery could continue for some

The survey of 1,653 companies was carried out during the first three weeks of October, before the threat of a strike by coal mine deputies was lifted.

Producer prices were expect-ed to rise 0.4 percent from Oc-tober to January, while employment in manufacturing industries was projected to fall 0.8 percent during this period. But the CBI forecast that manufacturing investment rate of 16.2 percent in the first six months of 1985, after a 14.2-

CARNO. Wales - In this green countryside of rolling hills and picturesque cottages is the head-quarters of a worldwide organization that has shoppers buzzing from Beverly Hills to Paris. It is Laura Ashley Ltd., a $130-million-a-year business that glorifies Victoriana and has turned the clothes, wallpaper, sheets and similar trappings of a bygone British era into the profits of a new one. Laura Ashley is a relative newcomer to the ranks of such top British exporters as Burberry coats, Jaguar cars and Wedgewood china. But the chain, which numbers 187 stores worldwide, has nearly doubled in size in the last four years and is growing Worldwide sales have averaged a sizzling 46-percent growth annually over the last decade, ac-cording to management. The U.S. market accounts for more than half the company's annual sales. In the United States, no British retailer has as extensive a network of stores as Laura Ashley. There are 48 shops — the first opened in 1974 — and 15 more are scheduled to open each year for The attraction is clear: Laura Ashley's U.S. stores ring up sales per square foot that are five, and sometimes even 10 times higher than retailing norms in the United States. Moreover, the company seems to have attracted affluent customers wherever it locates.

This record has not gone unnoticed. While British entrepreneurship has flagged in recent years, Laura Ashley is one example often cited by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of a company that has triumphed despite the general malaise.

"If you've got the formula right, you can just turn it out," said John James, managing director.

That may not be easy. Expansion is taking Laura Ashley into new and untried markets — Japan, for instance — where the ways of doing business are far different. And, the company must begin to examine whether it is in danger of oversat-uration, especially in the U.S. market. Already, Laura Ashley is finding it tougher to come up with store locations that do not cannibalize sales at existing stores.

Even more central to Laura Ashley's future is the question of the depth of its appeal: In today's (Continued on Page 13, Col. 3) new homes in the United States, led by a sharp increase in activity in the South, soared 21.9 percent in September, the biggest increase in more than four years, the Commerce Department said Tuesday.

Single-family homes were sold at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 679,000 in the month, compared to an August rate of 557,000. It was the largest gain since a 26.8 percent increase from April to May 1980. The new increase came mamly from Southern states, where sales were up 52 percent during last month. It was only the second gain in the last seven months.

Sales had been sluggish since February, with housing analysts blaming higher interest rates for the slowdown.

U.S. interest rates have edged down slightly since their average peak of 15.2 percent in July, Fixedrate loans stood at 14.91 percent in early September, the first time they have been below 15 percent in three

Builders are encouraged by the increase in sales and so start new houses in greater numbers, a trend that spreads jobs and demand throughout the entire economy, according to some analysis.

The strong September sales gain followed an August decline of 8.8 percent. The rebound left sales at heir highest rate since March and 14 percent above a year earlier.
The South, which in recent years has accounted for half the new homes built, saw sales climb to an annual rate of 386,000. Sales were up 3.1 percent in the West, but were down 13.9 percent in the Midwest and were 5 percent lower in the

The average price of a new home climbed above $100,000 again. It was $100,100 in September, 2 4.9 percent gain from the August level. The median price of a new home was $80,000 last month, only a slight increase from the $79,700 of August.

The average price of a new bouse reached its peak in May, at $101,900 and then slipped back in June, July and August to $95,400. But almost all the decline was made up in one $4,700 step up in September.

Autoworkers End Strike Against GM in Canada

The Associated Press dian autoworkers started back to and Wednesday. work Tuesday after ending their said he hoped the U.S. workers hoping." would be back at work by the end of the week. The endorsement of the agreement with GM by the Canadian LIAW's rank and file members came as U.S. members of the union agreed on a new three-year contract with Ford Motor Co.

Eighty-seven percent of workers at 13 GM plants in Canada voted Monday in favor of the new contract agreed to Saturday by UAW and GM negotiators.

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - Comsat General Corp. has reached a preliminary agreement with Holiday lans Inc. to build a $140-million satellite communications network to provide cable television, videoconferencing, voice and data services to all 1,496 Holiday Inns, sources say.

"We are in negotiations with tholiday Inns," William L. Mayo, accurive vice president of Comsai tract," Bill Whitfield, a GM assem-General, said Monday. Comsat General is a subsidiary of Commumications Satellite Corp., which provides satellite communications services in unregulated markets.

A spokeswoman for Hi-Net Communications Inc., a subsidiary of Holiday Inns that provides entertainment and videoconferencing services to 350 Holiday Inn hotels, also confirmed negotiations were going on. Sources who requested anonymity said they expected a final agreement within two weeks.

Midland, which is Britain's third-largest bank after Barclays Bank PLC and National Westminster Bank PLC, decided to seek full control of Crocker, whose Crocker National Bank is the 13th largest U.S. bank, after massive losses at the California bank.

Since the end of last year, Mid-land has been steadily tightening its grip on Crocker's affairs. First, John Harris, former head of Midland's international operations. was sent to San Francisco to take chief executive of the bank.

Standard Chartered Bank, which acquired California-based Union Bank in 1979, is the only British bank among several that invested in the U.S. in recent years to have profited substantially from it. Mid and arrived last on the scene and made by far the biggest acquisition. While the others are regarded as disappointments by analysts here, Crocker has been a nightmare that has caused Midland's earnings to lag behind those of its chief rivals.

Largely because of Crocker, Midland's pre-tax profits [ell 49 percent to the equivalent of $84.7 million during the first half of this year despite a 16 percent increase en Novo's management team." in domestic profits to the equivalent of $174 million.

Ex-IBH Chief To Stand Trial

FRANKFURT -- Horst-Dieter Esch, founder and former chief executive of IBH Holding AG, will stand trial next month on charges of breach of trust and violation of company law, the senior public prosecutor in Hanau, West Germany, said.

It was announced last December that Mr. Esch was being investigated for possibly waiting too long to file a bankruptcy petition for IBH, which was the world's third largest construction-equipment company.

His trial, scheduled for Nov. 29, will center on his activities as head of the supervisory board of Wibau AG, an IBH subsidiary. Mr. Esch faces a maximum prison sentence of 11 years if convicted of the charges against him, the prosecutor said Monday.

Brazil's Feat in Building Itaipú Dam Is Tempered by Doubts Over Cost By Alan Riding New York Times Service FOZ DO IGUACU, Brazil -

After more than a decade of construction work, the huge Itaipu hydroclecuric plant on the Parana River between Brazil and Paraguay has begun power transmissions amid continuing controversy over its size, cost and timing.

When all its 18 generators are installed by 1990, the plant's 12,600-megawatt capacity will make it the world's largest electrical generating station. Including the cost of 500-mile (808-kilometer) transmission lines, the final bill will be over $18 billion.

Last Thursday, standing on a platform below the dam, 4.5 miles wide, President João Baptista Fi-gueiredo of Brazil and President Alfredo Stroessner of Paraguay formally inaugurated Itaipú's first two 700-megawatt generators, which in January will begin providing electricity on a commercial basis to both Paraguay and the Brazilian metropolis of São Paulo.

Although Itaipú is jointly owned by Brazil and Paraguay, Brazil assumed financial responsibility for its construction and will eventually take 95 percent of its power. But since Itaipu Binational Corp. was formed in 1973, the Brazilian economy as a whole, and demand for electricity in particular, have grown more slowly than anticipated.

Swiss Lead World In a Sarings Index

The Associated Press GENEVA - Swiss residents continued to lead the world in average per-capita savings in 1983, the Geneva-based International Sav-ings Bank Institute said Tuesday.

The survey showed Swiss residents had an average of 31,520 Swiss francy ($14.465) in the bank. The institute said that even if savings accounts held by foreigners are excluded, the average per-capita Swiss savings still amount to 29,504 Swiss francs.

The survey said Japanese residents ranked second.

To Invest now in Badgastein: Certainly One of the Most Interesting Investments Still Available

Profit From the Impetus of Badgastein as Long as It Is Still Favorable

Since the reopening of the famous Grand Hôtel de l'Europe at New Year's Eve 1982 with a performance by Liza Minnelli (Shown by the German. Austrian and Swiss television) and the sensational Estée Lauder Top Management Incentive. Professional investors have been attracted to this well-known spa and summer and wintersport resort in Salzburg County.

With the regional and national press writing more and more about this noble place it has become "in" again. With its many attractions, the Swiss newspaper "Neue Zürcher Zeitung" also carried a full page on its reviv-ing popularity with the title: "Badgastein skiing at the sources of youth."

What is so special about the Badgastein idea?

Imagine this wonderful place 1,000 m high with the combination of ski, sport and warm, cell-activating thermal water. Only two hours drive to Munich, one hour to Salzburg, four hours to Milano, Stuttgart and Vienna.

For a long time there has been no investment in the hotel business and marketing. Then three years ago new management be-came involved. Since then dramatic positive changes have been taken place, turning Badgastein into a very attractive investment area. The Grand Hôtel de l'Europe AG is today one of the biggest landowners in Badgastein. In addition to the hotel itself, the AG owns five other properties, among which the famous Hotel "Der Kaiserhof" which is converted into an apartment-hotel, 100,000 square meters land and its own thermal health spring. The company (founded in 1969) places and sells shares of companies in the property business.

It also offers apartments with 5-star hotel service. Out of the 85 units in the Grand Hôtel de l'Europe only 12 remain unsold. Even after 3 increases, prices are still very interesting (between U.S.$1,200 and U.S.$1,950 - per square meter), with a quality comparable to St. Moritz, for example. Some of the early buyers have already made profit of more than 40% in just two years.

And Badgastein is only at the beginning of its Boom

Badgastein today is where St. Moritz, Gstaad or Monte Carlo were 15 years ago. What did those farsighted investors earn who bought apartments in those places or participated in companies working in the property business! (The price for a well situated apartment in St. Montz, for example, is today up to U.S.$10,000 -- per square meter in Gstaad, and Monte Carlo about U.S.$5,000.— per square meter).

The Grand Hötel de l'Europe BadgasteinCorporation offers several interesting investment possibilities. Here too, as every professional investor knows, the rule is: one can earn a lot only by buying when the train

Austria shows the biggest increase in Gross National Product among the industrial countries in the last years, and has had no strikes during the last 35 years.

The reopening of the Casino in the Grand Hôtel de l'Europe in 1984, the congresses, the big cultural organizations during the festivals of Salzburg, the exquisite restaurants, the first amusement and therapy-park, all these are dynamic and creatively developed ideas which in the near future will make Badgastein the "Monte Carlo of the Alps".

Reviewed by Michael Moorcock

ORIGINALLY published in 1953, "Mr. Pye" describes the arrival on Sark, the English Channel Island where Mervyn Peake lived for several years, of a mild-mannered, middle-aged little gentleman. Harold Pye has embarked upon a crusade, in the name of his deity "The Great Pal," to bring sweetness and light to the world. His first convert is Miss Dredger, his landlady: "She surrendered with her hands thrust deep in her tweed pockets and a cigarette in her mouth and the white smoke coiling from her nostrils." Many others, including a mediocre local painter and the plump Miss George (Miss Dredger's archenemy), flock to the Great Pal's banner.

It seems Pye's vision of Sark -- "purified by its own recognition of the supernatural, purified by the ceaseless battle for self-improvement, purified and made happy by this common aim, so that it became the mecca, the panacea, the envy, not only of other little islands, thwarted and eternally brused with internecine warfare — but the envy of the world, who would come to know of this paradise, not three miles long, and would set sail for its rugged coast, that they might learn the Faith"—is about to be realized. Resisted only by the amoral Tingagieu, sexy, innocent, "self-conscious as a monkey and about as refined," his mission collapses when, to his horror, Mr.

Pye realizes he has begun to grow a set of angel's wings on his back. Desperately trying to find balance by acts of, for him, monumental wickedness (scratching a polished table. kicking over a kid's sand castle) he is relieved to discover that the wings are vanishing. But he's gone too far: unmistakable horns are sprouting on his forehead!

The fable is cleverly and gracefully resolved and the final scenes are a joy to read. Peake's illustrations complement the novel very well and these, too, are examples of his charm, of his enormous illustrative range.

Peake was as skilled a draftsman as he was a narrator. His earliest supporters were chiefly people not usually associated with works of fantastic imagination; they included Elizabeth Bowen, John Brophy, Graham Greene, John Betjeman, Angus Wilson and Hilary Spurling.
His great trilogy has not yet discovered its potential readership, I suspect, because of its association with the romances of Tolkien and C. S. Lewis, with which it has little in common. Peake's prose is as vital and accurate as his line (see his drawings of Belsen, where he was the first war artist inside the camp). His eye always held steady when regarding human evil but his concerns were never morbid or abstract; they were firmly rooted in reality, as were his char-

Electronic Chessboard Speeds Scoring

Agence France-Presse
BELGRADE — Yugoslav engineers have perfected an electionic chessboard which transmits the moves to scorers as soon as they are made. They say players will notice no difference in the pieces or the board, which also contains a memory so that a game can be analyzed afterwards. The board will be used in competition soon.

Dickens's is - amplified but never distorted - with a similar compassion, a hatred of cruelty, an understanding of the nature of evil (never represented by shadowy super-villains with grand designs but by self-pitying individuals motivated by malice and envy against those they think luckier than themseives).

Perhaps a wider range of Peake must be read before the public comes to recognize his seminal importance. In the meantime "Mr. Pve" serves as a good introduction to those who have steered clear of Peake, expecting his darkness, as it were, always to be utter. For those already convinced of his complex and sophisti-cated talent, this fable should shed new light on the nature of Peake's particular genius.

Michael Moorcock's novel "Gloriana." which received the World Fantasy Award, is dedicated to Mervyn Peake. He wrote this review for The Washington Post.

CHICAGO — The rookie sensation Michael Jordan scored 37 Player of the Year at North Caronpoints — 22 in the final quarter — na. But he credited his performance to help the Chicago Bulls to a 116-Bucks in the only National Basketball Association game played Monday night.

The 6-foot-6 (1.98-meter) guard single-handedly brought the Bulls back from a six-point deficit with less than five minutes to play, as he scored 13 of his team's final 17 points in a torrid fourth quarter.

"Basketball is fun again, thanks to Michael Jordan," said Orlando Woolridge, the Bulls' second-leading scorer with 30 points. "He is a laugh a minute on the court. I don't think he tries to be funny, but he is so upbeat and intense. There is a kind of magic in his ability to turn a game around and to instill in his mmates a desire to excel."

The Bucks' coach, Don Nelson, said: "We did everything we could to stop Jordan, but our doubleng efforts proved futile."

Last weekend, seeing Ballic again, there was so much that was familiar. The ginger hair, the un-lined face, the zealous eyes, and the fiery, distressed inability to accept defeat. The difference was that, since time has deprived him of the one thing that refuses to accelerate with the years, he was a bystander cursing the failure of others to perform for him in his own image

"I couldn't believe the first half," said Ball, the new manager of Portsmouth FC after the surprising home defeat to Wolves. "We were at home, playing to go top of the table in front of our biggest crowd of the season, and there was so little ession and commitment. It was as if we didn't want to win." He was visibly trembling from head to foot. He repeated himself. He said he couldn't understand the lack of pride, lack of professionalism, lack of passion. He couldn't begin to answer what got into his players' heads, only that he had left them in the dressing room with (he hoped) burst egos. What was troubling Ball —in his first major coaching role since hanging up boots that had won a World Cup winner's medal and in a 22-year pro careerhad carried him team, after being unbeaten in 10 games, should surrender so meekly

They also lost last week, and he lambasted them publicly for their unprofessionalism then.

Ball is, in a way, in the classic Catch-22 situation. Because he had ultraprofessional standards inculcated into him by his father almost from the eradle, he assumes that the following generation will be fired by the same obsessive pride of performance. Over 22 years he has studied humself very well. "All I ever knew was football," he has said. "My strengths are character, determination, honesty and an awareness - a sixth sense you might call it — to see things on the field." All very true. Alan Ball smoldered with passion for the fray. He began rebelling as a teenager when one club rejected him as a "jockey because of his 5-foot 6-inch, 145pound (1.68-meter, 65.8-kilogram) frame and though, at 21, he proved them so wrong by being the babe of England's victorious World Cup team he seldom mastered his irritating, petulant response either to referees or the ingrained belief that defeat represented some personal

"All my life," he admitted, "I've done silly things on the pitch that got me sent off and made people shy away from giving me the responsibility of captaincy."

He had cried and thrown away his losers' medal after his first Cup final with Everton, he had never come to terms with starting his career at the top alongside Bobby Moore, Bobby Charlton and Co. in England's last good national elevto all that desire. He did lead his nation, briefly, under Don Revie's management. And even the renowned captains he played under, such as Frank McLintock at Arsenal, counted him the "hardest driver of men I've played with." Age, we thought, would temper

And yet there was a positive side

the excess and teach him to use his strengths positively. Toward the end of his playing career. I'm sure it did so. At Southampton and then finally at Bristol Rovers he was an inspiration to younger teammates and much of what the current internationals Steve Williams and Steve Moran may achieve is attributable to Ball's goading and his example in training

But now, admittedly a manageri-al novice at 39, he has the reins of a the field. Portsmouth - once the the English divisions - cannot afford much longer to struggle out-side the First Division. It sacked Ball's predecessor, the builder of his side, for failing to gain promo-

And for Alan Bull, read France Beckenbauer in West Germany, Edu in Brazil or any other young men who, having been gods in their time, are suddenly asked to make others perform the magic of their couth, to restore through others the sheer grace and subtlety of his own play may seem a taller order than expecting Ball to drive players to the limits of their running power.

But now he finds how time has changed. How in a single generation even average performers think the world owes them a living. How soft schooling, soft living cushioned by televison and a vast panoply of technological toys, has apparently mellowed their desire

It may seem that Ball's own fight gainst diminishing output is, apart from the mevitable physical decline, supremely praiseworthy. I'm sure he sees it that way and that his father, also Alan Ball, would have, too, had he not transally died pre-But perhaps it is just beginning to dawn on Ball junior that life the other side of playing is going to demand an awful lot of learning of new skills from him. At the first defeat in 11 games he casugates his employees, and at the second he wonders aloud why they have lost their sparkle.

No one in my hearing had the wit or the courage to suggest that possibly his own almighty wrath - so soon and so public - had undermined the confidence on which, 900 games should have taught him, so much in the game depends. For better or worse, the majority of the players he inherited are his team, and understanding what makes them tick as individuals is an art that takes time, patience and the ability to nurse egos as well as nuncture them. The wise bull learns after a time to stop battering his head against the immovable gate.

EW YORK — The New York
tabloids have been having a picnic with the Mayflower Madam picnic with the Mayflower Madam

ple at The Post and News. This is a story, and there is nothing a newspaperman leves more than a story, except Friday night at the pay win-

This concerns a woman arrested on charges of running an elegant brothel on the Upper West Side. Among the thousands of ancestors inevitably accumulated over a 350year span, the defendant claims one who was among the earliest American immigrants. And so she became the Mayflower Madam.

At The New York Times we are not supposed to be interested in Mayflower Madams but don't let the starchy facade fool you. Behind it lurk masses of news people seething with just as much delight in prurient-interest stories as the people over at The Daily News and Thus I spent the week green with tails of Arabian sheikhs squander- the same thing sober-side papers ing sultans' fortuces in Mavflower Madam's establishment.

Arabian sheikhs with their limitless millions are essential to such stories nowadays. When I first began reading this sort of news, the rich beasts who paid fortunes for such sport were usually (unnamed) Hollywood millionaires.

Times change, alas, and Hollywood millionaires no longer have the power to enchant the harried newspaper reader. For that you now need sheikhs of Araby, and in the Mavilower Madam story the tabloids had them.

Did these delightfully wanton sheikhs with their vile carnal appetites rent an entire suite in the Waldorf Towers for orginstic goingson? You bet your sweet patootie

What's more, at least one of the licentious devils bathed one of Mayflower Madam's employees in champagne. Possibly because I am a tightwad, this part of the story seemed improbable.

With champagne going at $40 a bottle I can't believe that even an Arabian sheikh would treat it like

Still, with sheikhs, who knows? Maybe this particular sheikh has a childhood memory of the old Cecil B. DeMille movie in which Cleopatra bathed in 50 gallons of milk. Maybe he mistakenly remembered it as 50 gallons of champagne. You can see why I envy the people at The Post and News. This is a dow, and at The Times this week we haven't had a good story. We could have had a good story: the presidential election. But the whole news industry got together and killed it with professional poll-

Now that everybody's poll as-sures us that President Reagan has the election locked up, the only interesting question left is whether anybody will bother to vote.

In the interval we have a long pause here without much of a story, and the business of journalism, of course, is storytelling.

This is what the tabloids are up to in the trifling but cotertaining eavy as the tabloids ladled out de- story of Mayflower Madam. It is and networks are engaged in when reporting a presidential election as a sporting contest.

The important news about prostitution in New York is not that a discreet brothel with a rich clientele operates quietly on the West Side, but that prostitutes encumbering midtown sidewalks are so commonplace that millions of New Yorkers accept them as part of the environment, like potholes.

There is no story in this news. except when the occasional maniac behaves like Jack the Ripper. But Mayflower Madam, with its elements of a frothy Ernst Lubitsch film about life's high-living sophisticates — that is a story.

In the same way, the matters at issue in a presidential election may he gravely important but they rarely make a story. This is why even the best political reporters spend more energy telling you which horse is leading and which battler is planning to take off the gloves than in trying to pierce the curtain of misinformation that is the essence of every campaign and find out what the candidates really mean to do once the election is over and they can safely turn off the clap-

Politicians provide claptrap to give the public an entertaining story. The typical campaign, like this year's, is the political equivalent of the Mayflower Madam

MURRELLS INLET, South Carolina — The red sedan had New York planes, a redhead behind the wheel, and a burly guy beside her who looked like he felt comfortable packing a gun.

It hurtled down the winding road, kicking up dust. It balked at the DEAD END sign declaring the water's edge, then turned into a driveway and parked. The burly guy got out. There was a woman standing there, watching him.

"My daughter collects auto-graphs," said Charlie Hand, 52, a prison guard. "She's got Walter Cronkite, Angie Dickenson, Jimmy Carter, Teresa Brewer. So she's watching TV, and sees these [beer] commercials, and says, 'Daddy, I've got to have Mickey "Sent him on an errand," said the woman, who was named Jane, which rhymes with Spillane, who is her husband.

"You sent Mickey on an errand?" asked the redhead. She eyed her car. Very nervous. "Uh, we've got his parking place. Does he lose his temper easily?"

It is the common fear of strangers: That the real-life Spillane, the man behind the United States's hottest avenging private eye, might be as rough and tumble and unforgiving as Mike Hammer. No telling how he would take a redhead in His Spot.

A white Ford pickup wheeled up and out climbed a stocky fireplug of a man with a menacing gray crewcut and a bullneck. He wore khaki shorts, a T-shirt and topsiders, strings unlaced.

But Spillane, with mirth lines exched about pale blue eyes, never seeks revenge against invaders. In fact, a cooler of ice-cold beer sits behind the bar. "Have one," Spil-lane said, a Brooklyn drawl still grating after 30 years down South. He scribbled his auto-their own way," says novelist Max Collins, a mystery writer and Hammerophile who has edited a book of Spillane short stories. "The whole Mike Hammer ethic hinges on a very strict Old Testament moral code."

Critics weren't so kind. They accused Spillane of hating wom-en, of sadism, of dispatching a generation of youth to delinquency via Hammerism.

"I was a little afraid of him at first," confesses his 37-year-old bride of 11 months, Spillane's third wife. She is perky, blonde and petite, standing just over five feet, an ex-Miss Watermelon. "He's a pussycat," said Jane.

The Duke watched him eye the sports car in a showroom window. One day, Spillane found it sitting in his driveway, a red ribbon attached, and a note that read, "Thanks, Duke,"

He writes beneath a bulletin board that bears his bad reviews. Eleven manual typewriters dot the house. He types with two fingers, always writing the endings first. Then, in 1970, the Hammers halted again, his most recent crime book being "The Last Cop-Out" in 1973.

"Hemingway hated my guts." says Spillane. The rivalry began in the '50s, as Spillane tells it, when Spillane visited a restaurant in the Florida Keys and saw Herringway's photograph on the wail. A waitress recognized Spilianasked for his photograph and mounted it alongside.

But the restaurant was a Hemingway pit stop, on his way to and from Cuba. "Take his down or mine down!" Hemingway exploded when he saw it. An irate waitress yanked Hemingway from the wall. He never came back.

"Hemingway? What did he do that made him so big?" asks Spillane. "He wrote some good stuff. but what was so big about it? He never sold that many." The word "sold" goes on like a stretch lim-
